

A Different Peace

Peace is not just a word, it is an action that people are willing to take.

Peace is the battle of identity one has, to accept their true self.

The place peace begins is in the heart of one, you.

Peace is a safe haven of love that welcomes you into its arms.

Peace is just a five-letter word with voice of one but when one voice turns into many, then peace is love.

Peace is the endurance of love.

Peace is the strength of holding onto one's identity.

Peace is the song that's formed by the soothing flow of the river.

Peace is the light that outshines the darkness.

Peace is the rhythmic beat of a song.

Peace is having the courage to stand in a crowd to say this is me.

Peace is having courage to stand up for what you believe.

Peace will come by itself when you are ready to accept people for who they are.

Peace is the respect for any type of life small or big.

Peace is the balance of nature, of people, the nature of people.

Peace is not one color but the representation of many colors.

Peace is not a word of one language but of many.

Today peace is at the end of the horizon but tomorrow it will be the sunrise.

Today peace is unattainable, but when the world reaches out together the unattainable will be the new attainable